I need to have a column1...column. How do I do that? df.columns = ['column1','column2','column3','column4'] This, of course, doesn't work. I need to be able to add the new column and still retain the grouping. Edit: I need to add a column called "slug" and have all of the columns as columns1...column with a slug 'value' which is pulled from a more complex part of the code. This column is added based on the column values and the column names. It is not dependent on the values in the column. A: As mentioned in the comments, the easiest way to do what you're trying to do is to access the columns of a DataFrame via df.columns rather than hard-coding in the names of the columns of a DataFrame. The second easiest way is to use the name parameter of the DataFrame constructor. The following example works: data = [[1, 3, 5], [3, 4, 5], [3, 3, 3], 3e33713323
