Resistance of Serratus Anterior Fascicle to Injury: Case Report. The serratus anterior fascicle is the only direct attachment of the rhomboids to the ribs. It originates from the inferior border of the scapula and inserts on the ribs. The serratus anterior fascicle (SAF) is involved in some anterior shoulder pathologies, including supraspinatus tears. The SAF is often injured in sports, but few cases of spontaneous SAF injury have been reported. The authors report a case of an isolated, spontaneous injury to the SAF, which was observed during a real-world diagnostic shoulder MRI. The injury was isolated, without signs of injury to the neighboring structures. No structural pathology of the rhomboids was found. The patient experienced pain and functional limitations over the lateral aspect of the scapula, with no limitation of other shoulder movements. Over a period of 6 months, the patient reported improvements in pain and function.

This case suggests that the SAF should be included in the differential diagnosis of isolated injuries of the shoulder. An isolated injury to the SAF could occur with no structural abnormalities in the rhomboids.
