You will get a clear understanding of the supplement after going through each section of this review. So, let's jump into the review without any ado.

What is Brown Adipose Tissue (BAT)?

Brown adipose tissue, also known as brown fat, is a type of fat that can generate heat and burn calories. It gets its brown color from the high number of mitochondria it contains.

Mitochondria are the “engines” inside cells that convert nutrients into energy. BAT is packed with mitochondria, which gives it a dense, brown appearance.

Unlike white fat that stores calories, BAT is active fat that burns calories to produce heat. This process is called thermogenesis. When BAT is activated, it ramps up calorie and fat burning. Even small amounts of BAT can burn a significant amount of energy.

Research shows lean people tend to have more brown fat than overweight or obese individuals. Boosting low levels of BAT could potentially help increase calorie expenditure and promote weight loss.

That’s why brown fat is an area of interest in treating obesity. Some strategies like cold exposure or certain foods/supplements may help turn white fat “beige” and take on characteristics of calorie-burning brown fat.

While more human research is needed, targeting BAT provides a promising new approach to obesity treatment and weight management. Puravive natural ingredient formula claims to naturally increase BAT levels without cold exposure, but the evidence is still preliminary.
