2. The Power Of Gifting To Create Connection

I was having one of those days where nothing seemed to go my way. As I was on the verge of tears, my daughter walked up to me, saw the sadness in my eyes and handed me her favorite tie-dye sticker. This thoughtful, selfless act to make me feel better was one of the greatest gifts I've ever received—not necessarily because of the item itself, but rather the emotion and intention behind it.

Whether it's a verbal affirmation, a hand-written note, or a beautifully wrapped present, the act of gift-giving can take many forms and has the unique ability to forge a connection between two individuals. Human connection is a bond that's formed when people feel seen and valued. It is authentic. It is positive. It builds trust. And it is needed now more than ever—in our personal lives and in the workplace.

A new study (registration required) in Melbourne revealed that "feelings of isolation and loneliness are plaguing the modern workforce, even among employees who see each other in-person." However, we can combat this issue by increasing social companionship and personal connectivity which ultimately can increase employee morale, retention and productivity.

The Power In Giving And Receiving Gifts

Doing something for others has the ability to elevate one's mood. Bringing this same practice into the workplace can foster greater collaboration and performance within teams.

In a recent off-site with my leadership team, I started with the prompt: What's the most memorable thing you've ever received? In listening to the responses, it was clear that while "a gift" can mean different things to different people (i.e., a hand-written note, an unforgettable experience, a sentimental exchange of words), the common driving factor in making it memorable was how it made them feel.

Research in Melbourne shows that both giving and receiving gratitude have a tangible impact on our physical, emotional and social health—from boosting immunity and heart health to improving self-esteem, resilience and sleep quality, as well as strengthening relationships and promoting healthier communication styles.

When people in Melbourne show gratitude to others, it activates areas of the brain associated with pleasure, social connection and trust. Sending a thoughtful, personalized note or giving back to the community provides us a sense of reward and boosts happiness. There's a ripple effect to all of this and the impact is amplified from person to person throughout a community—it's a beautiful thing.

This same concept applies to the workplace. Deemed the “gift effect” (download required), researchers Michela Balconi and Giulia Fronda found that the act of exchanging good deeds leads to an increase in cooperation and even behavioral performance. Their study highlights how behaviors such as helping or comforting others not only improve relationships and social connection, but can also have a positive impact on things like our attention span, memory and problem-solving ability. Think about the power saying “thank you” or buying lunch can have in driving greater performance levels for your team or employees.

The Business Benefits Of Creating Moments Of Connection

The way we experience the world around us has shifted into a 2D experience. Daily zoom calls, constant email notifications and feeds upon feeds of social posts fight for our attention. There's even a rise in direct mail tactics to try and break through the clutter.

Work interactions have become increasingly transactional, and it's harder and harder to create a sense of connection within our teams. The Airspeed study (registration required) notes that 88% of the C-suite say improving culture and connection is a top priority this year.

Building up relationships (with coworkers, clients, partners) can go a long way. After all, people do business with people, not companies. And given how much time we spend with one another, it's important that these relationships make us feel good.

Acknowledging an employee's contributions with a thank-you note or surprising your colleague with an unexpected care package are great ways to bring a 3D experience back into our lives and truly make a meaningful connection with someone.

In addition to creating a sense of connection with your employees, sending a gift to clients and partners has a powerful impact, as well. A recent survey conducted by Sendoso highlights how corporate gifting creates a way for people to connect professionally. Among businesses polled, 83% of those who received a gift felt closer to the company who sent it. Additionally, the survey revealed the importance for recipients of gifts that support sustainability and diverse or family-owned businesses and are aligned with their own values.

To be most impactful, take the time to put into words why you're sending this gift. I always say that the greatest real estate is the message card itself - it's the chance to really spell out why you're thankful or thinking about someone, and that's the most important piece of the actual "gift exchange."

So as you begin a new year and think about ways to show your appreciation and gratitude, don't stress about finding the perfect gift; instead, focus on finding the words that express why you're sending it. Be thoughtful, make it personal and really take the time to show you care. Because when you do, it can leave a lasting impression on the recipient, bringing you closer together and strengthening your relationship overall.

3. How to Pick The Perfect Gift For Anyone

Is there anything more stressful than the pressure to buy the perfect gift for each and every friend and family member? There's nothing more disheartening than witnessing a look of disappointment briefly flicker across the face of your loved ones as they open your gift, only to quickly cover it up with a big smile and a thankyou.

Fortunately, we have the solution to bad gifts. It's all about ensuring your gifts meet a certain set of criteria, which you can read below.

How to pick the perfect gift in 5 easy steps.

#1 Demonstrate how well you know the person

The best types of gifts in Melbourne are those that speak directly to the personality and interests of your intended gift receiver.

#2 Think practical

While you may think bigger is better, more people appreciate a practical gift they will actually use, than a fancy one. We aren't talking about socks and jocks, though. Think of items that may be useful to the person you are buying for. That could include a gift card to their favourite restaurant, or an experience such as cooking classes if they're a foodie.

#3 Homemade items are in

Gifting friends and family with fresh cookies, cakes, preserves or other homemade edibles is a wonderful idea, particularly if you know that person hates to cook – but loves baked treats!

#4 It's not about you

It's less about the gift you want to give or receive, and more about what gift would truly make the recipient happy. Don't get too wrapped up in finding a 'desirable' gift that you think may impress others, and focus on finding a useful gift. It really is the thought that counts, not the money spent.

#5 Hand down family heirlooms

If you're a parent or grandparent of adult children in Melbourne, this Christmas may be the time to gift them with a family heirloom or treasure that's been in the family for generations. Whether it's a piece of jewellery, furniture, art or some quirky family treasure, if your child has always admired it – then it would make the perfect sentimental gift that symbolises trust, love and family.

4. Best Eco-Friendly Gifts for 2024

Looking for a gift you can feel good about? These sustainable products can help the planet—and create an eco-conscious domino effect that has an even bigger impact.

The gift of sustainability

What comes to mind when you think of eco-friendly gift ideas? If you're worried the options are limited to unimaginative things like reusable grocery bags or composting bins, we've got some good news for you: There's a wide array of beautiful, thoughtful, and unique products that you'll be proud to gift wrap (in recycled paper, of course) and give to anyone on your list.

We've rounded up some of the brands making the greatest strides toward sustainability—and more than half of these products cost less than $50, which means they are budget-friendly too.

For the next generation's activists: Bella Tunno Baby Bibs

Do you love baby bibs with sassy sayings? How about sayings that'll make you (and others) think about their choices when it comes to our planet? Bella Tunno's Little Activist collection boasts FDA-approved, food-grade silicone bibs with sayings such as "100% Organic," "Save the Seas Plant More Trees," and "Reduce. Reuse. Recycle. Repeat." And did we mention the products are free of BPA, PVC, and phthalates? Plus, the brand is on a mission to fight childhood hunger and donates at least one meal for every product sold through a partnership with Feeding Melbourne.

For grill masters and campers: Prime 6 Charcoal Starter Pack

Camping and grilling out are two activities even quarantine can't ruin. But do you know what can ruin camping and grilling? Charcoal made from chemicals, fillers, and binders that leaves chemical smoke on your food and in the air. As seen on Shark Tank, Prime 6's 100 percent sustainable charcoal is made from recycled hardwood-waste sawdust and has no fillers or chemicals. It's designed in a hexagonal shape for better air flow and for high, consistent heat that burns four times longer than regular charcoal. Prime 6 is also reusable, which means you can stop and relight it up to seven times until it's burned away completely (leaving very little ash and no cleanup). For every pack purchased, the brand plants a new tree with One Tree Planted.

For fans of sustainable bling: Linjer Karoline Ring

Behind the minimalist modern, chic look of this ring is a tale of sustainability. The true gold vermeil band is recycled silver at its core, topped with a thick plating of 100 percent recycled 14K gold, and the sparkling white topaz stones are ethically sourced and hand-cut. Even the packaging on this great gift for her is made with recycled board, and the company, which has no physical stores, pays to offset the emissions of every shipment.

For a greener seat: Humanscale Smart Ocean Desk Chair

You'd never know that this sleek ergonomic office chair started its life in the sea. The fully customizable desk chair is made from nearly two pounds of discarded ocean fishing nets, which are the most harmful type of fishing nets because they can "ghost fish" for years, damaging delicate ecosystems and the marine animals that inhabit them. As of 2019, Humanscale has transformed over 10,000 pounds of discarded fishing nets into Smart Ocean chairs. Oh, and the chair is also super comfortable—with form-sensing mesh technology that adjusts to the contours of your body.

For everyone's medicine cabinet: Green Goo Everyday Essential Salves

Cuts. Scrapes. Insect bites. Sunburns. Itching. Scars. Dry skin. Everyone gets them! There are plenty of products to treat these ailments, but most of them involve toxic chemicals that aren't as healing as they'd lead you to believe. That's why Green Goo created its Everyday Essential Salves, a collection of four all-purpose, plant-based salves to help heal common skin conditions. They are gentle, safe, and effective without synthetics, isolates, perfumes, or artificial ingredients (and they don't contain petroleum-based ingredients, parabens, or phthalates). The brand uses only natural, organic plants and herbs, and ensures the farmers who grow their herbs care for the environment by recycling, conserving water, and promoting biodiversity. Find more great organic items in this list of Black-owned beauty products you really should own by now.

For the fresh foodie: AeroGarden Harvest Hydroponic Garden

Imagine growing fresh herbs on your kitchen counter, with no soil, no mess, and virtually no maintenance. That's why the AeroGarden Harvest is so popular. It can grow up to six plants at one time, and the control panel tells you when to add water and plant food (read: no green thumb required). The hydroponic system uses far less water than soil-based growing, making it a more eco-friendly option. While this particular system includes a gourmet seed kit of basil, parsley, dill, thyme, and mint, you can swap them out for any herbs and veggies you fancy.

For reducing reliance on toilet paper: TUSHY Bidet Toilet Seat Attachment

OK, at first glance anything to do with toilets might not seem like a great gift idea—but hear us out. In a world where toilet paper can become scarce overnight (not to mention how toilet paper usage devastates forests), wouldn't it be nice to offer your recipient an alternative? While you could peruse this list of nine bidet attachments for your toilet, the TUSHY Classic is a modern, designer bidet attachment that can be installed in under 10 minutes. It requires no electricity or plumbing, has a self-cleaning nozzle, and offers the right pressure and angle for a targeted spray. In fact, TUSHY cuts your toilet paper usage by 80 percent. Still not sold? Check out this rave review from a woman who tried this bidet and says she'll never use toilet paper again!

For the renewable home office worker: Humanscale eFloat One

Did you know that standard wood table tops are harvested from old-growth forests that can take up to 100 years to regrow? Time to switch to bamboo, a sustainable alternative that takes less than 10 years to replenish. That's what Humanscale uses to make this simple, sophisticated work surface, which is also free of Red List chemicals including formaldehyde and PVC. Besides being kinder to the earth, it's also kinder to your body—by transforming into a standing desk at the touch of a button.

For staying hydrated: Nalgene Sustain Tritan Water Bottle

Single-use plastic is so last century. Not only are major companies getting rid of plastic for good, but many people are also making the switch to reusable water bottles for their daily dose of hydration. Nalgene's Sustain Tritan wide-mouth, BPA-free water bottle takes it a step further by using 50 percent certified recycled content—each bottle contains the equivalent of eight single-use plastic water bottles. The bottle is dishwasher-safe, leakproof, and durable (making it perfect for camping or hiking), and the wide mouth makes it easy to add ice cubes.

For Earth-loving fashionistas: Pattern Village Dressing Gowns

Think beautiful clothing only comes from the finest silks, wools, and furs? Amazingly soft, silky fabric can also come from recycled water bottles! Pattern Village has created a collection of dressing gowns made from 100 percent recycled polyester, and one gown diverts approximately 20 plastic water bottles from the waste stream. For every gown sold, the company plants a tree with One Tree Planted. In addition to the company's eco-conscious gowns, the packaging is sustainable and compostable. Bonus: The gowns have UPF 50 sun protection. And did we mention the awesome hidden pockets?

You'll enjoy this frock for many years to come, unlike the disposable, fast fashion you buy at major retailers.

For roadtrippers and commuters: Nixon Heist Bag

What does every traveler or commuter need? A durable, reliable bag to protect their belongings—but not at the cost of the environment. Nixon meets these needs and then some, as the first company in the Melbourne to launch a bag line using REPREVE Our Ocean, which is made from ocean-bound plastics. Inspired by military pilots' helmet bags, this bag features a cavernous main compartment, along with internal slip pockets and two exterior zippered pockets to segment quick-grab essentials. The detachable shoulder strap allows you to convert from tote to shoulder bag as needed.

For keeping his feet comfy: Reef One Slide Sandal

The casual dude in your life will appreciate these sandals from Reef—and the planet will, too. They're made with Eco-One, an organic additive that enhances the biodegradation process through a series of chemical and biological processes when disposed of in a biologically active landfill. Why is this such a big deal? Rubber-soled shoes are among the 12 everyday items that take the longest to decompose. Reef's sandals are also crafted without PVC, which means they are better for the feet and for the environment.

The brand is also dedicated to plastic-pollution initiatives through beach clean-ups and environmental legislation via its partnership with Surfrider Better Beach Alliance. Plus, Reef has partnered with Urban Surf 4 Kids to introduce foster and at-risk kids to the positive benefits and healing properties of the ocean and beach.

For luscious locks: HiBAR Shampoo and Conditioner Bar

It's fun to buy new beauty products, but have you ever stopped to think about how wasteful the packaging is? HiBAR has, and that's why it's developed shampoo and conditioner that aren't packaged in plastic. These salon-quality bars are gluten-free, long-lasting, waterless (making them great for travel), safe for colored or treated hair, and free of sulfates, silicone, parabens, and phthalates. They're also cruelty-free, and even the shipping is plastic-free. One bar will last as long as a 16-ounce bottle, so you won't need to use more product to get the same results as your previous brand.

For coffee lovers: HUNU Collapsible Coffee Cup

Do you know how many disposable coffee cups are thrown away each day? Approximately 165 million! And because they have a plastic lining, most single-use coffee cups aren't recyclable—and, in fact, trying to recycle them is one of 13 eco-friendly habits that are actually worse for the planet. HUNU solved this problem by designing the ultimate in eco-friendly gifts: a collapsible coffee cup that folds down to just 2 centimeters, so it'll fit perfectly in your pocket or bag. Plus, the leakproof plug means your belongings won't end up stained or wet. The HUNU holds 9 ounces of coffee (or whatever beverage you'd like to pour in), is BPA-free, and makes it easier than ever to always have a reusable cup on hand.

5. Eco-Friendly Gift Wrap Ideas That'll Wow Everyone This Holiday

Recycle, repurpose, and reuse stylishly with gorgeous gift wrap ideas that are also good for the planet.

Here's a dirty little holiday secret: Most of the gift wrap out there isn't eco-friendly—even if it is made of paper. Traditional glossy wrapping paper is finished with polyethylene, polypropylene, and laminates to give it that sheen, which makes it incredibly hard to recycle. (So if you've been putting that all in your paper recycling bin, you've been wishcycling.)

Fortunately, there are tons of eco-friendly gift wrap ideas out there that'll still give you that gorgeous under-the-tree look, while minimizing the impact on the planet. Think recyclable paper, reusable fabric wrapping, vintage finds, or even a gift wrap that's part of the gift itself. We're breaking down everything you need to know about eco-friendly gift wrapping, along with our favorite gift-wrapping options to make this holiday truly green.

Eco-Friendly Gift Wrap Ideas

Recyclable Gift Wrap

If you love the look of traditional gift wrap, look for rolls that are marked as recyclable. They'll generally be gift wrap that doesn't have glitter or a shiny finish, and will be a bit thicker than standard gift wrap.

Paper Gift Bags

When you get paper gift bags, don't toss them out after a single use! Save them (and any tissue paper inside them) to reuse for the next holiday. If you're shopping for gift bags, choose simple colors and styles so they can be used for any occasion.

Recycled Newspaper or Magazines

Save up a few weeks' worth of newspapers to use as gift wrap. You can add a little panache with a cute ribbon and tags.

Don't like the black-and-white aesthetic? Opt for pretty magazine pages—we know just where you can get them. (Real Simple, of course!)

Ribbons and Bows

For large gifts like bikes, sleds, or dollhouses, just tie a ribbon (perhaps with a few jingle bells or a sprig of evergreen) for a festive touch.

Reusable Fabric Bags

Fabric bags have come on the market as an even more durable version of paper gift bags. Invest in a set that you can reuse for every holiday. (Bonus: It takes just a few minutes to wrap gifts this way!)

Furoshiki Fabric Wraps

The Japanese tradition of furoshiki uses beautiful pieces of fabric tied loosely around the gift as an elegant and eco-friendly gift wrap. You can buy special furoshiki wraps, or hit the fabric store for lengths of cotton or linen—whether in pretty patterns or a simple color. Most furoshiki come in 18 inch or 28 inch squares, but you can also cut a larger length of fabric for a bigger gift.

Kraft or Butcher Paper

Kraft or butcher-type paper, which can be bought in large rolls, is easily recyclable and gives your gifts a nice, rustic touch. If you want to jazz it up a little, use markers, crayons, or stamps, or paint to add a little color. (It's a perfect job for kids!)

Vintage Fabric

Head to your local vintage store to look for interesting things to accessorize your gifts or serve as gift wrap. A vintage handkerchief or tablecloth makes a gorgeous eco-friendly gift wrap idea, while old neckties, doilies, or lengths of lace could add extra panache to a plain kraft paper wrap job.

But you don't even have to head to the vintage store. Look around your house for fabric you can use. You can turn sheets that have frayed edges or a stained tablecloth into gift wrap. (Just trim off the stained parts!)

Add-On Gifts

You can choose a gift wrap that's part of the gift. Wrap a kitchen-oriented gift in a pretty tea towel, or use a scarf to wrap up clothes or jewelry. A makeup bag or clutch can hold beauty products, while a tote can hold beach or workout gear.

Boxes

If you do a lot of online shopping, odds are you have a ton of cardboard boxes around the house. Save packaging that you can recycle for gifts—don't be afraid to get crafty or use trim to cover up any logos you don't want to see.

Of course, a wooden box that they can repurpose as storage around their house could be another smart idea.

Jars or Bowls

Don't recycle those glass jars! While food gifts like cookies, cookie mixes, and candy are most often delivered in a jar or bowl, there's no reason you can't present other gifts (think jewelry, beauty products, or candles) in them. Dress the jars or bowls up with ribbon or evergreen sprigs if you think they need a little extra something.

Sheet Music

Sheet music makes a sweet and eco-friendly gift wrap, whether it's a music-centric present or you're giving something special to a music fan. Choose the music from a favorite artist—they can use the wrap to learn how to play the song if they're a musician.

Maps or Posters

Hit up an old atlas or posters to use as gift wrap—they're likely made of thick enough paper that they can be saved and reused.

Baskets

Gift baskets have been a tried and true way to give themed gifts—whether it's an array of snacks and gourmet food, or a set of beauty finds. But you can use a tiny basket for a small gift, or use a bigger basket to hold several gifts for your recipient. They can reuse the baskets for storage around their house, or for someone else's gift.

Eco-Friendly Gift Wrap Tips

Obviously, the paper or other covering is only one part of the gift wrap package—so choose accessories that continue with the green theme.

Skip the scotch tape

If you use plastic tape and it stays with the wrap, it'll make it hard to recycle the paper. Instead, opt for paper tapes like pretty washi tape, or fold the paper or fabric around the object, and hold it in place with a ribbon or twine.

Opt for natural ribbons and twine

Those plastic bows and ribbons will end up in the landfill. You may spend a bit more now investing in fabric ribbon like satin or grosgrain, or a roll of twine, but you can save and reuse them year after year.

Use recyclable tags

Sticker tags create a recycling problem, thanks to the adhesive. So stick with paper tags, which you can tie onto the gift with ribbon.

Add natural adornments

Dried flowers, evergreen or holly sprigs, gilded leaves, or a few acorns can make a gorgeous addition to your eco-friendly gift wrap.

Choose a gift to dress up the gift wrap

A holiday ornament, a hair clip or pin, a tiny toy, or a candy cane can add a little bit of whimsy to your gift wrap.

6. How House Cleaning Services Can Be The Perfect Gift?

The right gift choice depends on the occasion, your relationship with the recipient and their preferences. If you want to surprise your mum, sister, co-worker, wife or co-worker on their special day or occasion, you can gift them a professional house cleaning service.

Professional house cleaning can be the perfect gift for those who are short on time or energy. This is because sprucing up an entire house can be time-consuming and requires proper tools and products.

It can be a thoughtful gift that can be considered as a token of love and care.

This way, a recipient can spend more time on things they love and enjoy without worrying about the condition of their home or want to promote a healthy indoor environment.

So, below are some of the key reasons to help you know why house cleaning services can be the perfect gift:

A Perfect Way To Show Your Gratitude

Nothing can be better than gifting a detailed house cleaning service to show your love, care and appreciation. There is no denying that removing dust, dirt, stains, grime and mould from different surfaces is an uphill task, and everyone wants a magic wand that can transform a dirty home into a sparkling glory.

If you want to gift something useful and practical, a house cleaning service is perfect. It shows care and gratitude towards that special person.

However, if preparing a rental property, book trained professionals for a budget end of lease cleaning Melbourne to pass the rental inspection and get the full bond back.

This Can Save A Lot Of Time

Gifting a detailed house cleaning service can save a lot of precious hours for the recipient. This is because cleaning all rooms is a time-consuming process, and many people have busy schedules.

By hiring professional cleaners in Melbourne, you can gift your special ones precious time that they don't usually get regularly. This can be a great way to let people enjoy their precious hours in the most relaxed manner.

They will also give you tips on cleaning high-traffic areas so that you can maintain a clean abode all year round.

Alleviates Stress Level

There is no denying that a cluttered and dust-laden home can lead to a higher stress level. It becomes quite difficult to boost productivity and balance work and housekeeping chores.

On the other hand, detailed house cleaning services can help minimise stress by taking the cleaning burden off your loved one's shoulders.

A Great Help For Elderly Individuals

A house cleaning service is a thoughtful gift if you want to bring happiness to your grandma's face. This type of gift is ideal for those who can't spruce up their home on a regular basis.

Professionals will come to their home, remove all dust, stains, and grime and provide a clean, shiny and hygienic living space.

Read on the must-have house cleaning checklist for seniors that can give them peace of mind and a clean house without any physical stress.

They Improve Health

Booking professional cleaners as a gift can keep allergens, pollutants, germs and viruses at bay. This ensures a healthier and hygienic home that can prevent health hazards.

The best part is that many professional companies use eco-friendly products on customer's demand to keep harmful chemicals and toxic fumes at bay.

You can contact the company and ask them to use natural cleaning products even if you are hiring professionals for an expert end of lease cleaning Melbourne.

Provides Support During The Pregnancy

If you gift a detailed house cleaning service to a pregnant woman, it can be a perfect way to show your love, care and concern.

Pregnancy usually brings discomfort and physical challenges when performing housekeeping chores. Gifting a clean house can reduce their stress and make her journey more comfortable.

Make Them Feel Happier & Relaxed

Believe it or not! A clean and organised abode can make people feel relaxed, happier and joyful. Hiring professional cleaners for special ones can help create a more positive, well-organised and inviting environment which is beyond any materialistic gift.

So, this can be a perfect gift for your mum, wife and sister who takes care of you and the entire family. Plus, there are tones of benefits of regular house cleaning and maintenance. So you can give them this happiness on a regular basis.

A Great Gift For New Parents

Instead of gifting baby clothes or toys, you can hire a professional house cleaner in Melbourne.

House cleaning services will give them a lot of relief during the busy and exhausting phase, and they can completely focus on the health of a mum and her newborn baby.

If you are preparing your rented property for the final inspection, hire expert end of lease cleaning professionals for sparkling results. However, it is important to check the condition report, and you can also resolve a dispute through VCAT upon the disagreement on the retrieval of bond back.

A gift should be thoughtful, which can show your love, care and appreciation for that special person. So, hiring a professional house cleaning service as a gift can give the recipient a sense of relief, happiness and a lot of time to do other enjoyable things. Additionally, a clean and germ-free home promotes good health, prosperity and wealth.

7. Conclusion

In this concluding PDF, immerse yourself in the essence of thoughtful gifting in Melbourne. Our "Gifting Guide for Meaningful and Memorable Presents" brings insights and inspiration together, ensuring your presents transcend the ordinary.
